INTERESTING FACTS

Frisée lettuce has great similarity with endive. Characteristic are the curly, strongly slitted light green to yellow leaves. Frisée lettuce originated in the Mediterranean region and Central Asia, but has now also made it into German cultivation.

Actually, the roots are old acquaintances. However, with the discovery of the potato, the parsnip lost its importance in this country. By the way, the external resemblance to parsley roots is by no means coincidental: botanists consider parsnips to be a cross between carrots and parsley. Parsnips taste slightly sweet, spicy and pleasantly nutty.

Wasabi comes from the cruciferous family. In Japan, the rhizome of the plant is used as a spice. By grinding the rhizome on a wooden board covered with shark skin, the green paste is created, wasabi traditionally tastes not only spicy, but also has a slightly sweet note. Similar to horseradish and mustard, the pungency of wasabi is due to mustard oils contained in the rhizome.
